Coca-Cola's Journey website launches its own blogger contributor network

Share this article: f t in g+

Coca-Cola continues to transform its corporate website into a full fledged media publication, and now it is launching an invite-only network of bloggers to share their content on it.

In a new section called "The Opener," Coca-Cola's Journey website will now host content from popular bloggers, photographers and other creative publishers. The content will focus on three categories for now, namely food, culture and innovation. The initiative works sort of like LinkedIn's Influencer program, but instead of getting big names to contribute to their platform, Coca-Cola says it is trying to unearth new talent and give them access to its resources.

"LinkedIn recruits influencers to provide content for LinkedIn," says Ashley Brown, Coca-Cola's head of digital communications and social media. "We've designed Opener to be a two way street, giving bloggers the 'Coca-Cola' megaphone so they can grow their blogs."

Coca-Cola dojíká s novou reklamou, (ne)známým tvářím přiřazuje jména

Potkáváte je denně, každý den jim děkujete, ale neznáte jejich jméno. Prodavačka v obchodě, řidič autobusu nebo třeba vrátný v práci. Podle Coca-Coly je to trošku nezdrovňilý, a tak se rozhodla ve svém novém videu udělat těmto známým-neznámým radost. Jak jinak, než lahvi proslulé limonády s jejich pravým jménem.

Děj tříminutového spotu se odehrává na Filipínách, kde lidé zažívají podobné situace. Místo jmen dostávají denně vídané tváře přezdívky - řidič je "brácha", balíč tašek v obchodě je "kluk", securiták v práci je "šéf". Nikdo nezná jejich skutečné jméno - až na Coca-Colu, samozřejmě.
